

Abstract of the Disclosure

This invention describes a compact weight powered engine and its use in building an efficient walking device. The engine utilize the energy people spent walking as the power source to drive a new type of roller skates / roller blades, either directly coupled to a shoe as a single integral unit, or they may be made so as to be attachable to a shoe; or to be use as the power source to generate electricity while walking.